OLD-TIME ANTAGONISTS MEET IN A NEW FIELD.

PICKED ORATORS FROM EACH UNIVERSITY

DISCUSS THE DESTRABILITY OF POLITI-

CAL UNION WITH CANADA. est time in the history of the colleges. Yale and princeton met in a struggle where strength of muscle was exchanged for strength of argument, and where quickness of thought took the place of feetness of Though there was no referee or umpire to de cide which college gained the supremacy, the struggle was none the less carnest. Princeton's first intercollegiate debate with Yale was an interesting affair and is probably the precursor of many more. The colleges, and with the daughters, wives and friends al train shortly after 1 o'clock, and were enter ained by the committee having the debate in charge. Promptly at 8 o'clock this evening Alexander T. McGill, Chancellor of New-Jersey, advanced to the cont of the platform in the historic Second Presintroduced the debaters to an audience which com-pletely filled the large building. He also stated the nestion and explained the conditions of the contest. The question was:

Resolved, that the peaceful annexation of Canada would be beneficial to the United States." Each debater was to make an opening speech of not more than ten minutes duration, to be followed a five minutes rebuttal. Princeton had the ffirmative and Yale the negative.

The debate for Princeton was opened by Mr. Denald McCall. '94, of the Chesophic Society, who said the vital considerations lie along three great lines-material, commercial and political. Canada's area capable of wheat production is greater in extent then the wheat area of the United States and will produce more bushels to the acre; Canadian forests have in them timber enough to supply all America for years to come; the Canadian fisherles are the greatest in the world; the Canadian mineral development promises to surpass any on the continent. Mr. McCall finished his argument with a brief consideration of the commercial and polltical advantages to e derived from political annexation with Canada.

J. J. Chamberlain, '95, was Yale's first speaker.

He said agnexation between this country and Canad means the doubling of our territory and the addition of over five millions of people to our population One million of these are French Roman Catholics, and absolutely control one province at least. They would be everything but desirable citizens. Besides this, history teaches that territorial expansion and political degeneration go hand in hand. Jay F. Ewing, '93, of the American Whig Sci was Princeton's second speaker. After a brief re-capitulation of Mr. McCall's commercial arguments, he proceeded to prove that these could not obtained by the United States except through political

The second of Yale's debaters was W. D. Leeper, o the Law School. He showed that the issue raised the question of annexing Canada was distinctly one between republican and imperial forms of govern of the two ever to agree. To incorporate any la perialistic doctrine into the United States would mean the death of our free institutions, while it is practically impossible to make Canada the republican country the United States is. He hit the keynote of the question when he said that political union was by no means necessary. The only advantage of such union would be the abolishing of the present tariff aws which exist between the two countries. Com mercial union would affect this as well as political union, without its attendant disadvantages.

was the last speaker for Princeton, and to him fe the greater part of the work of rebutting Yale. He said: "It was by no mere coincidence that wheneve we have broken down the barriers that keep us from a larger growth, we have prospered beyond our wildest dreams. We made no mistake when we annexed Florida, or Louisiana, or Arizona, or New Mexico, or Colorado, or Alaska. Providence has ordained that we should live in a wider field, in a quickly dispersed by the police.

Ten men say that the competition in prices are such that they cannot earn over 86 or 87 a week. The building collapsed, burying five people. The dead are S. J. Chartler, uncle of stephen Carter, and Lillie Chartler, twelve years old.

One year ago the factory was erected at a cost of $20,000, and Mr. Carter said soon after he was rescued that his stock was worth $30,000. Both are total losses, covered by insurance.

The police suspect that the fire was of incendiary origin. They have in their possession an affidavit sworn to by Peter Rokowski, night watchman of the building, who alleges that stephen Carter, proprietor of the concern, was in the factory just five minutes before the fire was discovered, although Carter states he was not there after 10 o'clock. Rokowski says tarter and his foreman came in at $300 lighted a lantern and went upstairs. He heard nothing more of them until 9 o'clock, when the foreman came down alone. Carter returned at 10 o'clock and left the place. The watchman at 1:30 went on his rounds of the building and encountered Carter on the fourth floor. Carter said everything was all right and went out the front door. A few minutes later he discovered sparks dropping from a chute.

Deputy Surveyor Wyatt had Thesday of November. Deputy Surveyor Wyatt had been informed by proper authority that he was to succeed Mr. Reattle, and had his gripsack packed rendy to start for Washington to visit the President and receive his commission. But two days before the election the unexpected happened, as it usually does. Louis Bieral, who had been dismissed from his place as inspector or customs, as he declared, without sufficient cause, and who blamed Mr. Beattle as the author of the removal, entered the Surveyor's and receive his commission. But two days before as the author of the removal, entered the Surveyor's office in the Custom House, and shot at him three or four times with a revolver. One bullet took effect in his thigh, another passed through his left hand and a third went into the celling.

The shooting suspended the removal operations and Mr. Wyatt's orders to go to Washington were countermanded. Mr. Beattle got well and served out his term, and Bieral was tried for attempted murder, in the United States District Court-the shooting having been done on United States property-and senced to five years' imprisonment

Soon after Mr. Beattle was able to return to duty he turned his attention to his deputy who had shown a willingness to become his successor, preferred charges against him, and with the aid of Mr. whitney, then seer tarry of the Navy, succeeded In having Mr. Wyatt removed from his place as Deputy surveyor. Nicoll, who had been the surveyor's private secretary and stenographer, was appointed in his place. It remains to be seen whether Mr. Cleveland is now ready to take the action which was suspended by Louis Bieral's pistol six or seven years ago by appointing Mr. Wyatt Surveyor of the Port. e turned his attention to his deputy who had shown
